

Naturalism and Freedom

Naturalism is the view that everything that exists can - in principle - be described and explained by the natural sciences. Since freedom is a normative concept, based on reasons, naturalism is incompatible with the view that human freedom exists. Reasons are normative, they cannot be naturalized. In my lecture I will expose, what might be called a reasons' account of human freedom and discuss some of its implications.